MARIE GLOW STUDIO

The Pinterest Setup Checklist

Ten checks, in the order to do them, before you make a single pin. Every step comes from Pinterest's own help pages, last checked October 2026.

Pinterest works more like a search engine than a social feed, so the account has to tell Pinterest who you are and what you sell before the pins have much to work with. Tick each box as you go.

- [ ] 01 Use a business account

  Pinterest recommends a business account for claiming your website. If you only have a personal account, switch it over in your settings.

- [ ] 02 Put what you do in your name

  Your display name is searchable. "Marie Glow Studio" tells Pinterest nothing. "Marie Glow Studio | Web Design and Pinterest Marketing" tells it what to show you for.

- [ ] 03 Write your bio in plain words

  Say who you help and what you offer. If a stranger can't tell what you sell in one read, Pinterest can't either. Copy this and swap in your own words:

  > I help [who you help] with [what you offer]. Find [your main product or service] at [your website].

- [ ] 04 Claim your website

  Claiming tells Pinterest the pins linking to your site are yours. Open the menu at the top right, choose Settings, choose Link to Pinterest, click Claim next to Websites, pick a method, enter your URL, and click Verify.

More on check 4. Pinterest gives you four methods: an HTML tag, an HTML file, a DNS record, or Google Merchant Center (only available to some accounts). After you claim, you can remove the tag, file, or record from your site. You have to own the domain and be able to edit its source code. Pinterest says most stores hosted on marketplaces like Etsy, eBay, and Amazon can't be claimed, so check your own settings under Claimed accounts. If Etsy isn't an option there, claim your own website instead.

- [ ] 05 Name your boards for search

"Sparkle and Shine" sounds nice and ranks for nothing. Name each board with the words your buyer would type into the search bar, then add a short, plain description with those same words. Start with a handful of boards that match your main product or service categories.

- [ ] 06 Check your Rich Pins

Rich Pins pull details from your site, like a product price or an article headline, into your pins. Your pages need Open Graph or Schema.org markup in the page head, so if someone built your site, ask them to check. Product Rich Pins only show data if the product is in stock, the price is accurate, and you meet Pinterest's merchant guidelines. New markup can take up to 24 hours to sync. Etsy, Teachers Pay Teachers, and eBay sites need no markup.

- [ ] 07 Make your pin images 2:3

Pinterest recommends 1000 by 1500 pixels. Pins taller than 2:4.2 get cut off in the feed, so a very long image loses its ending.

- [ ] 08 Lead your title with the keyword

A title can be up to 100 characters, but depending on the device only the first 40 or so show in the feed. Put the thing people search for first, then the benefit. Use this shape:

```
[What it is] for [who it's for]: [the benefit]
```

- [ ] 09 Write the description for Pinterest

  A description can be up to 800 characters. It doesn't show in the home or search feed, but Pinterest uses it to decide what the pin is about. Lead with your keyword, then add the personality in the second half.

- [ ] 10 Link every pin to the exact page

  Someone clicked because the pin promised something specific. Send them to the page that delivers that thing, not your homepage. After a month, check your top five pins and make more like them.

If you checked all ten, your account is set up to be found. What it still doesn't have is the research that decides which keywords to go after, the board plan, and the first set of pins.

Want it done for you?

The Pinterest Account Setup and SEO Optimization covers keyword research, competitor analysis, a board strategy across up to 10 boards, 10 custom pins, and a 30 day launch plan. One payment of $497. No one can guarantee rankings, traffic, or sales on Pinterest, so I don't.

marieglowstudio.com/pinterest-account-setup

Already have an account and want a second set of eyes? The Pinterest SEO Audit is $197 and comes with a ranked 30 day plan. marieglowstudio.com/pinterest-marketing

Marie
Marie Glow Studio, marieglowstudio.com